Project and senior managers know that all IT projects require effective team effort.

The Cushing Practice provides an integrated project assessment service, giving IT providers:

- a “success factors” database to apply against IT initiatives. This allows for a comparison with best-in-class performance supported by a constantly updated knowledge- and experience-based database.
- both the objective process and the tools necessary to examine a project, a series of projects, or an overall IT strategy against a best-in-class profile.
- a performance standard of measurable goals that can be targeted, achieved, and monitored.
- a method of initiating effective team building.
- detection of likely cost overruns – before they occur.
- quantitative data, benchmarks, metrics, and predictive & prescriptive outputs.
